Description

1. The Army's intent has not changed in the past 220-plus years: To fight and win our nation's wars! An inherent Army leadership responsibility in that mission is to avoid unnecessary risk to the sons and daughters entrusted to them and to make best use of the nation's fiscal resources earmarked for defense. Marshaling these resources to execute the Army's mission is fundamental for decisive victory today and tomorrow.

2. Risk Management is the Army's primary risk-control process. Properly used, it maximizes full resource potential. It supports and encourages initiative. Our goal is to make risk management a routine part of planning and executing operational missions. Risk Management does this by providing a systematic, logical thought process to identify and control hazards that threaten optimum resource allocation.

3. The purpose of the training is to familiarize all Army soldiers and civilian employees with Risk Management.

Who should attend: All active-duty soldiers, reservists and National Guard, and Department of the Army Civilians.
